Name and country

Department of Applied Research, Directorate of Conservation of Ancient and Modern Monuments, Hellenic Ministry of Culture, Greece

Short description

The Directorate of Conservation of Ancient and Modern Monuments (DCAMM) is the Central Conservation Service of the Hellenic Ministry of Culture, the service responsible for the Conservation of cultural heritage around the country. Personnel consists mainly of conservators of different material specialisations, conservation scientists and administrative staff.

It is organised in four departments: 1. Applied Research; 2. Conservation Studies; 3. Conservation Projects; 4. Administration.

DCAMM produces conservation studies, which essentially are extensive and detailed conservation proposals; undertakes and also supervises conservation projects around Greece; issues the conservation practice permits, which allow graduate conservators to undertake projects at the private sector; and the sampling permits, which are necessary for carrying out scientific analyses to cultural heritage; assists the work of any Regional Service of the Ministry, such as local Museums and Ephorates of antiquities; collaborates with other Central Services, such as the Directorate of Museums, and the Directorate of the Restoration of Buildings.

Our main activities are focused on the:

- documentation and evaluation of new and old conservation treatments;
- instrumental analyses of cultural heritage material;
- research and testing of new conservation materials;
- preventive conservation;
- climate change and its effects on monuments

- issuing the sampling permits for movable cultural heritage property

The purpose of the Department of Applied Research, DCAMM is to:

- provide advice on the conservation and analysis of cultural heritage
- provide support for the conservation and analysis of cultural heritage to any Regional Service and/or Museum in Greece in the form of personnel, lab space, equipment.

The Department of Applied Research, DCAMM can provide:

- access to cultural heritage property,
- instrumental analysis expertise,
- organisation of workshops and seminars.
